

For Effective Church Communication

MAKE THE MOST OF MOTHER'S DAY

It is the best evangelism & outreach
Sunday of the year!

BY YVON PREHN

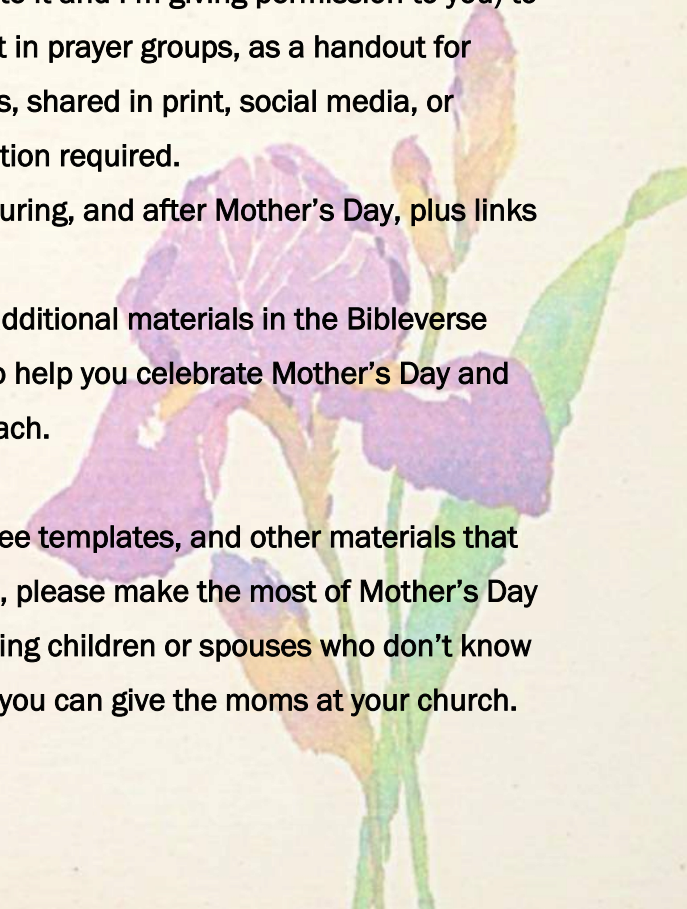

Mother's Day gets some of the highest attendance of unchurched visitors of any Sunday and it isn't because of Mothers.

The Mothers are always there. The high attendance comes from the unchurched kids and spouses who come to church that week to make Mom happy. This presents an incredible outreach and discipleship opportunity and this short eBook will help you make the most of it.

What's here:

- Reprints of materials from the Effective Church Communications website (www.effectivechurchcomcom) that will:
 - Give you a new vision for the outreach and evangelism opportunities of this day and how to make the most of them.
 - Reminders of how to be kind to those who aren't Mothers.
 - Ideas for how to use Mother's day as a discipleship opportunity for your entire church.
- Also enclosed in this eBook are copies of One Mother's Prayer, a true story that has been reprinted and used thousands of times all over the world to encourage both physical and spiritual mothers to pray for the children they love. You have permission to make unlimited copies of One Mother's Prayer (I, Yvon Prehn, wrote it and I'm giving permission to you) to use it or reprint in any way you want. It can be used in prayer groups, as a handout for Mother's Day, for Mom's groups, for Grandparents, shared in print, social media, or websites, however you'd like. No linking or attribution required.
- Tips for communications you can create before, during, and after Mother's Day, plus links to FREE templates to enable you to do that.
- Depending on when you read this, there may be additional materials in the Bibleverse Shop (<https://bibleverse-shop.myshopify.com/>) to help you celebrate Mother's Day and make the most of it as an effective time for outreach.

Use as much or as little of the suggestions, links to free templates, and other materials that you want, but whatever you use or make on your own, please make the most of Mother's Day as one of the best outreach Sundays of the year. Having children or spouses who don't know Jesus meet Him on Mother's Day is the very best gift you can give the moms at your church.

Mother's Day and the often-missed evangelism and spiritual growth opportunities

Mother's Day Sunday is the third highest day for attendance in churches in North America, running slightly behind Christmas and Easter. Though most churches know this and work hard to make it a special Sunday, many miss significant evangelism and spiritual growth opportunities for that day—because of the day's exclusive focus on mothers.

Please don't misunderstand me. I'm not saying churches shouldn't honor mothers on Mother's Day. They should; it is an important time to praise mothers and to thank God for them. What I'm recommending is that churches not make mothers their exclusive focus, but that they take advantage of the additional ministry opportunity made possible that day because of mothers. Here are three ways to do this, each of which will be discussed in more detail:

1. Evangelism opportunities: unchurched children and spouses
2. Honor moms by challenging them to pray
3. An opportunity to challenge your people to spiritual parenting

Many materials that will help you implement the suggestions in this ebook, including ready to print PDFs, templates that can be modified, additional articles, plus an overview video are available at:
<https://www.effectivechurch.com>

Evangelism opportunities: unchurched children and spouses

The reason that churches are so full on Mother's Day is not because it is the only time of year mothers come to church. Most of the mothers at the church are regular attendees. The reason so many people come to church on Mother's Day is the unchurched people in the lives of many mothers rarely, if ever, come to church, but they will come on this day to make mom happy.

This is a great evangelistic opportunity for your church!

Following are some ideas on how to make the most of it:

- Make it a priority in your planning for your staff to recognize that this is a tremendous evangelistic and outreach opportunity. Make this reality influence what you will say and what communications you have on hand, what you will give out on Mother's Day. The suggestions that follow will help.
- Assemble a prayer team to pray, or add to your prayer list, requests specifically for the unsaved, unchurched, and straying family members who will come to church with mom on this Sunday. Pray for sensitivity to their needs. Create attractive invitations for your members to give family members.
- As leader or pastors acknowledge the visitors who come on Mother's Day to please an earthly parent and affirm it was a commendable thing to do. Follow that commendation with a lesson/sermon about how they have a heavenly parent who is longing for them come home in faith even more than their mom wanted them to come to church.

- Be honest that one of the greatest pains in a mother's heart is that her child does not know Jesus. To be apart in life is hard, even as a child grows up, but to contemplate an eternity without those you love—one Sunday in church won't make up for it.
- In your sermon, say for the mother what she would want to say to her child. Be honest that an eternity without Jesus means eternal separation from those we love. Acknowledge this is not easy to say and it is not at all comfortable to talk about on this happy day, but to not say things that can make an eternal difference is not expressing love. Love is honest about the consequences of a life lived apart from God.

Do more than preach—additional events can provide great impact and encourage visitors to return

- In addition to the times of conviction, also have fun with visitors and make them comfortable in church—schedule a “Welcome to Our House Brunch for Moms and Adult Children” or an “Visit Your Parent's Sunday School Class Open House” and do a sort of takeoff on Open House days at school.
- Schedule a very upbeat, outreach oriented Ministry Fair for that day so visitors can experience and explore what your church does on a regular basis. For example, many single adults (the unchurched adult children who come to church only on Mother's Day) often don't have any idea that many churches have fantastic single adult ministry programs. A table with literature, food, and fun people might be just the thing to get them to attend on a regular basis.
- For the unchurched husbands to see the men of your church around a literature table that talks about upcoming construction projects, work days, golf outings or sports events and that is staffed by men who reach out, welcome and engage visiting spouses in conversation is an incredible gift to give to the mom who comes every Sunday on her own.
- Let visiting family members know you want them to come back next week. Put a notice in the bulletin and tell them that this would really make mom happy if they returned.
- Challenge visiting adult children and spouses to make this Mother's Day the most memorable one ever for their mom by giving her the gift of faith in Jesus—the one Mother's Day gift that will give her joy forever.
- Be sure you have a clear gospel presentation, on how to become a Christian, in your bulletin and as a handout to take home. If you don't have them, check out the American Tract Society web site for some excellent ones.

In addition, in your bulletin have a link on your website for those who would like to explore the Christian faith in more detail and have the contact name, number and email of people for unchurched and children of people they can contact confidentially if they have questions or would like to discuss your church, the Christian faith, or what a relationship with Jesus is all about.

New born babies are a joy, but there is a greater joy

To see their unchurched family members come to know Jesus, to become involved in the church, to begin growing in their Christian life—that is the greatest joy and greatest gift you can give any mom.

Make it very clear to your audience what this means to mothers.

Honor moms by challenging them to pray

In addition to honoring moms for all their hard work and faithful service to their families, take time to encourage them with the importance of their prayers. A mother's prayer can not only change an individual life, but can literally change the course of history.

That doesn't always mean that the mom herself will know here on earth the impact of her prayers and the witness of her life. The article: One Mother's Prayers, in a variety of PDF formats for you to use, is a powerful, true story of a young man who was far from God in his youth, but whose mother prayed fervently for many years and who live ended very differently than how it began. Whether in your church bulletin, on your website or as a handout in women's ministry groups this piece can greatly encourage moms to pray. Reproducible copies of One Mother's Prayers in a variety of formats is included in this eBook. You have my permission as I am the author to make unlimited copies and use it in any way you want without linking or attribution.

Mother's Day, an opportunity to challenge your people to spiritual parenting

Many women who attend your church on Mother's Day are not moms. The reasons for that pain are many: they may have lost a child; they may be unmarried and with little prospects of a future marriage. They may be infertile and may not have had enough money for adoption or fertility treatments. They may have prayed for children for years, but for some reason the answer received was "no." The reasons are many, but the pain felt daily by many of these women is deepened significantly on Mother's Day. Often this pain is intensified by unintentionally unthinking and unkind actions of churches on Mother's Day.

Don't be unintentionally unkind

One church handed out flowers for women as they entered the church on Mother's Day. But before a woman got a flower, she was asked, "Are you a mother?" if the answer was "No" the woman was informed that the flowers were for mothers ONLY. In some churches only Moms are clapped for, receive a free brunch, acknowledged as significant or given other public affirmations. It is obvious and on display if a woman is not a mother. If a woman has spent many private hours crying over her inability to have children, imagine her feelings at that time.

Again, these reminders are not meant as a suggestion not to honor mothers, but honor can be done sensitively and with the feelings of the childless women in mind. One way to do this might be to focus briefly on the joy of physical children but then to shift into a challenge for spiritual parenting that all can be part of. You cannot take away the pain of childlessness, but that pain can be transformed into a vision for ministry if, in addition to special actions done for moms, the church actively presents some of the following ideas. One more note: though directed to women, in this article and for this day, mention should be made of the men who are not fathers and for whom often the pain is even more deeply hidden. Include them in the challenges listed below.

Challenges for spiritual parenting

- Remind all of the women in the church that the option to be a spiritual parent is one that is open to all women, as the prophet Isaiah said in Isa. 54:1 "Sing, O barren woman, you who never bore a child; burst into song, shout for joy, you who were never in labor; because more are the children of the desolate woman than of her who has a husband," says the LORD.

- Remind them that though they may not have physical children and truly insurmountable obstacles may prevent that, that nothing can prevent the birthing and raising of many spiritual children.

- Remind them that to be childless does not mean you do not have God's favor. Jesus never had an earthly child. Consider what that may have meant. He was fully human. Most likely all his childhood friends had children when he left home to travel around Israel and teach. I have wondered if the human part of him didn't feel pain, perhaps sometimes wondering what it would be like to have lived quietly in Nazareth and had a son who would have grown up beside him in the carpenter shop or a little daughter who would bring him water in the middle of a hot day. We know he struggled with God the Father over the cross and I wonder if in some lonely early morning prayer times he struggled with the wish that a child, like the children who loved him and clamored to be on his lap as he traveled and taught, that one could be his, truly, humanly, physically his.

But Jesus didn't have physical children and neither have many of the great leaders of the church, such as Paul. Yet because they didn't have physical children, does not mean they did not have spiritual children. Paul called Timothy, "His dear son," and Jesus often referred to his followers as his children.

You must be honest in your challenge that embracing spiritual parenting is not easy. It requires all the commitment, patience, and life-long support of physical parenting if it is to be done well. Like physical children also, spiritual children will learn far more from what they see than what they are told. Spiritual parents must live lives of holiness, discipline, and love for Jesus if that is the kind of life they want emulated by their spiritual children.

In addition, there are many spiritual orphans in every church—those who perhaps started a relationship with the Lord in college or another place, but who have moved and have been wandering spiritually since then. Challenge the potential spiritual parents in your church to help raise to maturity those around them who are young and weak in the family of God.

Finally, remind prospective spiritual parents that in addition to the commitment, work and possible pain of spiritual parenting, the words of the apostle John, who said near the end of a long life of ministry adventures and trials: "I have no greater joy than to hear that my children are walking in the truth (3 John 4)."

This might be a message for the Sunday after Mother's Day

You could also put this material on your website so that people who do not come on Mother's Day will see it. Because you have so many visitors that day, it is easy to miss the people who are not there. Those people include the women who do not have children who quietly avoid Mother's Day at church because the internal pain and insensitivity of people is simply too much to bear. For weeks prior to Mother's Day the childless are confronted with advertisements in print, on TV, the internet and every imaginable communication medium that remind them of what they do not have and perhaps never will have.

For the moms whose children are physically alive, but who were not at church on Mother's Day or perhaps are never around, watching other moms with happy families, children and grandchildren can also be emotionally wrenching.

A message the week after Mother's Day, if presented in an all-inclusive encouraging way and challenging everyone to be a spiritual parent can be a way to fill an empty place in a heart and heal pain. God put the desire to nurture the young in every heart and he has provided a way in his church to make that possible for everyone.

If you get a negative response

You can try to be sensitive and caring and you should, but don't be surprised if you are told it didn't help. Or if you don't get a positive response or receive an angry one, remember that people react in many, not always pleasant, ways to hidden pain.

There are no reasons, explanations, or solutions for the depths of some pain. The best we can do at those times is to share Jesus and lead people to his love and comfort and pray that it will be accepted.

There is a reason that the Bible tells us that someday God will wipe away our tears. Some hurts can never heal on earth. All we can do is hold tightly to the one who promises that someday all will be well.

One Mother's Prayers

Her worst fears had come true. Her son had become involved in a strange mystical religion. She had such high hopes for him. Since his infancy she prayed God would touch his life. Her husband wasn't a Christian and sometimes, in a temper, would taunt her praying, but she kept on.

Her son grew up in a small town. The family owned their home, but they weren't wealthy. Determined their son would have a good education, they scrimped and saved to send him to school. Somehow his brother and sister didn't receive the same attention or prayers.

He did extremely well in school. People began to notice his brilliant mind. A prominent citizen of the town set up a scholarship for her son's graduate studies. She was so proud. Her joy diminished with worries about his spiritual health. He attended church some, but he refused baptism. And there were little incidents—stealing, things like that. She worried and she prayed.

He excelled in graduate school and finished with high expectations. But his religion . . . his letters contained long explanations of finding true reality and speculation how reality divided into darkness and light. Jesus was not truly God incarnate, he said, but an example of pure light entrapped and suffering in matter. He had always been good with words, but these words wounded her.

She decided to visit him. She thought her heart could stand no more pain, but she was wrong. He was living with a girl and they weren't married. They had a son. She was a grandmother, but she couldn't be proud of it. In desperation she explained the situation to her minister. He told her that the son of so many tears could never come to destruction. Somehow the message seemed from God.

The years passed. Her son was unhappy with his job; he was often ill. He left the girl but kept the son. Finally he became disillusioned with his mystical religion and began to question her about God. He started to go to church again. There he found Christian friends and questioned them. He began to read the Bible.

Her prayers increased. Her husband died, but he had become a Christian in his final illness. She, too, grew weaker, older. She feared she would die before the prayers for her son were answered.

Her grandson was a teenager now and she went to visit. A changed son met her—a son hungry to know about God, asking questions, requesting prayer. A son who would one day rush to tell her he had given his life to God by trusting Jesus as his personal savior. At Easter her son and grandson were baptized.

Their times together now were so precious, talking about the Lord and praying together. Her prayers overflowed with thanks but still she desired much more for her son. She knew her son as a Christian less than a year. In the August after his Easter baptism she breathed her last and went home to the Savior, to whom she had spent so much of her life talking.

She never saw with earthly eyes the great man of God her son became. She never heard his great sermons or read writings that determined much of Christian theology. She never knew her son's insights would jog Martin Luther into seeing that one is justified by faith alone. She would never hear her son's words that caused so many hearts to consider Jesus as Savior: "Thou hast made us for thyself, oh Lord, and our hearts are restless until they rest in thee."

Every part of this story is true—the mother who prayed was Monica, the mother of St. Augustine.

One Mother's Prayers

Her worst fears had come true. Her son had become involved in a strange mystical religion. She had such high hopes for him. Since his infancy she prayed God would touch his life. Her husband wasn't a Christian and sometimes, in a temper, would taunt her praying, but she kept on.

Her son grew up in a small town. The family owned their home, but they weren't wealthy. Determined their son would have a good education, they scrimped and saved to send him to school. Somehow his brother and sister didn't receive the same attention or prayers.

He did extremely well in school. People began to notice his brilliant mind. A prominent citizen of the town set up a scholarship for her son's graduate studies. She was so proud. Her joy diminished with worries about his spiritual health. He attended church some, but he refused baptism. And there were little incidents—stealing, things like that. She worried and she prayed.

He excelled in graduate school and finished with high expectations. But his religion . . . his letters contained long explanations of finding true reality and speculation how reality divided into darkness and light. Jesus was not truly God incarnate, he said, but an example of pure light entrapped and suffering in matter. He had always been good with words, but these words wounded her.

She decided to visit him. She thought her heart could stand no more pain, but she was wrong. He was living with a girl and they weren't married. They had a son. She was a grandmother, but she couldn't be proud of it. In desperation she explained the situation to her minister. He told her that the son of so many tears could never come to destruction. Somehow the message seemed from God.

The years passed. Her son was unhappy with his job; he was often ill. He left the girl but kept the son. Finally he became disillusioned with his mystical religion and began to question her about God. He started to go to church again. There he found Christian friends and questioned them. He began to read the Bible.

Her prayers increased. Her husband died, but he had become a Christian in his final illness. She, too, grew weaker, older. She feared she would die before the prayers for her son were answered.

Her grandson was a teenager now and she went to visit. A changed son met her—a son hungry to know about God, asking questions, requesting prayer. A son who would one day rush to tell her he had given his life to God by trusting Jesus as his personal savior. At Easter her son and grandson were baptized.

Their times together now were so precious, talking about the Lord and praying together. Her prayers overflowed with thanks but still she desired much more for her son. She knew her son as a Christian less than a year. In the August after his Easter baptism she breathed her last and went home to the Savior, to whom she had spent so much of her life talking.

She never saw with earthly eyes the great man of God her son became. She never heard his great sermons or read writings that determined much of Christian theology. She never knew her son's insights would jog Martin Luther into seeing that one is justified by faith alone. She would never hear her son's words that caused so many hearts to consider Jesus as Savior: "Thou hast made us for thyself, oh Lord, and our hearts are restless until they rest in thee."

Every part of this story is true—the mother who prayed was Monica, the mother of St. Augustine.

One Mother's Prayers

Her worst fears had come true. Her son had become involved in a strange mystical religion. She had such high hopes for him. Since his infancy she prayed God would touch his life. Her husband wasn't a Christian and sometimes, in a temper, would taunt her praying, but she kept on.

Her son grew up in a small town. The family owned their home, but they weren't wealthy. Determined their son would have a good education, they scrimped and saved to send him to school. Somehow his brother and sister didn't receive the same attention or prayers.

He did extremely well in school. People began to notice his brilliant mind. A prominent citizen of the town set up a scholarship for her son's graduate studies. She was so proud. Her joy diminished with worries about his spiritual health. He attended church some, but he refused baptism. And there were little incidents—stealing, things like that. She worried and she prayed.

He excelled in graduate school and finished with high expectations. But his religion . . . his letters contained long explanations of finding true reality and speculation how reality divided into darkness and light. Jesus was not truly God incarnate, he said, but an example of pure light entrapped and suffering in matter. He had always been good with words, but these words wounded her.

She decided to visit him. She thought her heart could stand no more pain, but she was wrong. He was living with a girl and they weren't married. They had a son. She was a grandmother, but she couldn't be proud of it. In desperation she explained the situation to her minister. He told her that the son of so many tears could never come to destruction. Somehow the message seemed from God.

The years passed. Her son was unhappy with his job; he was often ill. He left the girl but kept the son. Finally he became disillusioned with his mystical religion and began to question her about God. He started to go to church again. There he found Christian friends and questioned them. He began to read the Bible.

Her prayers increased. Her husband died, but he had become a Christian in his final illness. She, too, grew weaker, older. She feared she would die before the prayers for her son were answered.

Her grandson was a teenager now and she went to visit. A changed son met her—a son hungry to know about God, asking questions, requesting prayer. A son who would one day rush to tell her he had given his life to God by trusting Jesus as his personal savior. At Easter her son and grandson were baptized.

Their times together now were so precious, talking about the Lord and praying together. Her prayers overflowed with thanks but still she desired much more for her son. She knew her son as a Christian less than a year. In the August after his Easter baptism she breathed her last and went home to the Savior, to whom she had spent so much of her life talking.

She never saw with earthly eyes the great man of God her son became. She never heard his great sermons or read writings that determined much of Christian theology. She never knew her son's insights would jog Martin Luther into seeing that one is justified by faith alone. She would never hear her son's words that caused so many hearts to consider Jesus as Savior: "Thou hast made us for thyself, oh Lord, and our hearts are restless until they rest in thee."

Every part of this story is true—the mother who prayed was Monica, the mother of St. Augustine.

One Mother's Prayers

Her worst fears had come true. Her son had become involved in a strange mystical religion. She had such high hopes for him. Since his infancy she prayed God would touch his life. Her husband wasn't a Christian and sometimes, in a temper, would taunt her praying, but she kept on.

Her son grew up in a small town. The family owned their home, but they weren't wealthy. Determined their son would have a good education, they scrimped and saved to send him to school. Somehow his brother and sister didn't receive the same attention or prayers.

He did extremely well in school. People began to notice his brilliant mind. A prominent citizen of the town set up a scholarship for her son's graduate studies. She was so proud. Her joy diminished with worries about his spiritual health. He attended church some, but he refused baptism. And there were little incidents—stealing, things like that. She worried and she prayed.

He excelled in graduate school and finished with high expectations. But his religion . . . his letters contained long explanations of finding true reality and speculation how reality divided into darkness and light. Jesus was not truly God incarnate, he said, but an example of pure light entrapped and suffering in matter. He had always been good with words, but these words wounded her.

She decided to visit him. She thought her heart could stand no more pain, but she was wrong. He was living with a girl and they weren't married. They had a son. She was a grandmother, but she couldn't be proud of it. In desperation she explained the situation to her minister. He told her that the son of so many tears could never come to destruction. Somehow the message seemed from God.

The years passed. Her son was unhappy with his job; he was often ill. He left the girl but kept the son. Finally he became disillusioned with his mystical religion and began to question her about God. He started to go to church again. There he found Christian friends and questioned them. He began to read the Bible.

Her prayers increased. Her husband died, but he had become a Christian in his final illness. She, too, grew weaker, older. She feared she would die before the prayers for her son were answered.

Her grandson was a teenager now and she went to visit. A changed son met her—a son hungry to know about God, asking questions, requesting prayer. A son who would one day rush to tell her he had given his life to God by trusting Jesus as his personal savior. At Easter her son and grandson were baptized.

Their times together now were so precious, talking about the Lord and praying together. Her prayers overflowed with thanks but still she desired much more for her son. She knew her son as a Christian less than a year. In the August after his Easter baptism she breathed her last and went home to the Savior, to whom she had spent so much of her life talking.

She never saw with earthly eyes the great man of God her son became. She never heard his great sermons or read writings that determined much of Christian theology. She never knew her son's insights would jog Martin Luther into seeing that one is justified by faith alone. She would never hear her son's words that caused so many hearts to consider Jesus as Savior: "Thou hast made us for thyself, oh Lord, and our hearts are restless until they rest in thee."

Every part of this story is true—the mother who prayed was Monica, the mother of St. Augustine.

Plain text below—even though saved as a PDF you should be able to copy and export into MS Word or any other text file

One Mother's Prayers

Her worst fears had come true. Her son had become involved in a strange mystical religion.

She had such high hopes for him. Since his infancy she prayed God would touch his life. Her husband wasn't a Christian and sometimes, in a temper, would taunt her praying, but she kept on.

Her son grew up in a small town. The family owned their home, but they weren't wealthy. Determined their son would have a good education, they scrimped and saved to send him to school. Somehow his brother and sister didn't receive the same attention or prayers.

He did extremely well in school. People began to notice his brilliant mind. A prominent citizen of the town set up a scholarship for her son's graduate studies. She was so proud. Her joy diminished with worries about his spiritual health. He attended church some, but he refused baptism. And there were little incidents—stealing, things like that. She worried and she prayed.

He excelled in graduate school and finished with high expectations. But his religion . . . his letters contained long explanations of finding true reality and speculation how reality divided into darkness and light. Jesus was not truly God incarnate, he said, but an example of pure light entrapped and suffering in matter. He had always been good with words, but these words wounded her.

She decided to visit him. She thought her heart could stand no more pain, but she was wrong. He was living with a girl and they weren't married. They had a son. She was a grandmother, but she couldn't be proud of it. In desperation she explained the situation to her minister. He told her that the son of so many tears could never come to destruction. Somehow the message seemed from God.

The years passed. Her son was unhappy with his job; he was often ill. He left the girl but kept the son. Finally, he became disillusioned with his mystical religion and began to question her about God. He started to go to church again. There he found Christian friends and questioned them. He began to read the Bible.

Her prayers increased. Her husband died, but he had become a Christian in his final illness. She, too, grew weaker, older. She feared she would die before the prayers for her son were answered.

Her grandson was a teenager now and she went to visit. A changed son met her—a son hungry to know about God, asking questions, requesting prayer. A son who would one day rush to tell her he had given his life to God by trusting Jesus as his personal savior. At Easter her son and grandson were baptized.

Their times together now were so precious, talking about the Lord and praying together. Her prayers overflowed with thanks but still she desired much more for her son. She knew her son as a Christian less than a year. In the August after his Easter baptism she breathed her last and went home to the Savior, to whom she had spent so much of her life talking.

She never saw with earthly eyes the great man of God her son became. She never heard his great sermons or read writings that determined much of Christian theology. She never knew her son's insights would jog Martin Luther into seeing that one is justified by faith alone. She would never hear her son's words that caused so many hearts to consider Jesus as Savior: "Thou hast made us for thyself, oh Lord, and our hearts are restless until they rest in thee."

Every part of this story is true—the mother who prayed was Monica, the mother of St. Augustine.

By Yvon Prehn

Some of the FREE TEMPLATES (Lots more on the site) for you for Mother's Day available at <https://www.effectivechurch.com/templates/mothers-day-templates/>

The templates are in ready-to-print PDF formats, editable MS Publisher files and image files.

Mother's Day Invitations

Mother's Day Come Back to Church and make Mom happy cards

Mother's Day Bookmarks on Seed Paper

Mother's Day Bulletins or Flyers to pray for Family Members to come

About Yvon Prehn

Yvon Prehn is the founder and director of Effective Church Communications and www.effectivechurchcom.com. For over 20 years, she taught church communication ministry, skills, and strategy at seminars, conferences, and national conventions all over North America.

She is now at home in Ventura, California, where she writes and creates online training materials to train, challenge, and encourage church communicators. The purpose of her ministry is to help churches create communications that help people come to know Jesus as Savior and grow to be mature disciples—in other words, to fully fulfill the Great Commission. This emphasis on the Great Commission is the North Star around which all other parts of her ministry revolve.

Through most of her adult working life, Yvon has worked in communication ministry as a writer and teacher. She was a newspaper reporter and religion writer for the Colorado Springs SUN for nine years. When desktop publishing was first invented, Yvon was a top-rated national trainer in desktop publishing for Padgett/Thompson, the nation's largest one-day seminar company before starting her training ministry. She worked as a communications consultant and trainer for numerous Christian ministries in Colorado Springs and was a senior editor at Compassion International and Young Life International.

Yvon then began a traveling and teaching ministry in church communications that has now moved online with many resources, numerous social media channels, and a podcast that can all be accessed through www.effectivechurchcom.com.

She is the author of many books, including the first book out on desktop publishing, The Desktop Publishing Remedy, published by David C. Cook in 1994. She has written for many Christian magazines and was the communication columnist for Christian Computing Magazine for over 20 years. All her writing is in the process of being made available in eBook and other formats, again available through the Effective Church Communication website.

Yvon has a master's degree in History, specializing in the history of the church, and has done additional graduate work in theology and communications. She briefly taught high school English and was an adjunct professor in church history at Regis University.

In addition to her formal experience in these areas, Yvon gets the opportunity to practice church communications in practical ways. She and her husband Paul have worked in many areas of ministry in the church, including single adult ministry, adult education, and small group ministry. Yvon has taught Bible classes in many places and currently teaches Bible classes on-line through a podcast, blogs, and a Bible-teaching Academy available through www.Bible805.com.

Yvon's seminars, plus her written and web-based materials, have helped thousands of people in Christian ministry and churches maximize their communications and enabled them to use them to help their churches fully fulfill the Great Commission.

About Effective Church Communications

Effective Church Communications is a ministry that provides training, resources, and inspiration to help church communicators fully fulfill the Great Commission.

I (Yvon Prehn) am the founder and primary content creator for the ministry.

The hub of the ministry is the website: www.effectivechurchcom.com.

My approach to church communications includes more than design and communication construction how-tos, though I have lots of them.

The North Star of my ministry is for everything I do and want to teach church communicators to do is to help people come to know Jesus as Savior and to grow to mature disciples; in other words, to fully fulfill the Great Commission. I continuously remind church communicators that we have been entrusted with the words of eternal life and the eternal destinies of people depend on how well we communicate the gospel of Jesus Christ. As a direct result of that for communication projects, you not only get an easy-to-use and sometimes free, sometimes paid templates and design tips, but a reminder of where this communication fits into bringing people to Jesus and helping them mature in their faith.

Though I work hard to stay current with technology, I value and attempt to teach timeless communication skills and strategies and I am amazed how much of the basic communication training I developed even prior to computers hold true in the digital age. Most of my training has applications in every communication channel, from print to podcasts.

I believe churches of every size, from tiny house churches to megachurches, benefit from clear, effective communication. I encourage churches to study their people, set goals, evaluate responses to communication projects, and to communicate based on who they are and where they are, rather than copy the latest megachurch or marketing trend.

If I have a preference and am picturing my primary audience, it is the small (including tiny storefront churches) to medium-size churches where primarily one person does all the church communications work in addition to juggling additional ministry responsibilities. Because of that, I do not recommend expensive equipment or complex graphic design programs.

I do not allow, encourage, link to, or promote in any way, irreverent, profane language, or snarky, cynical approaches to church communication or in the discussion of it. We serve a holy God, and we seek in all we do to walk worthy and communicate a worthy message that reflects our Lord. Church communications is a ministry to the church and community, one that represents the Lord and the entire church—there is no place for egos or entitlement in this ministry where we serve the servants of the Lord.

I strongly believe church communicators, of any age, from any size church, who use any software, with any skill level, can create incredible communications that God can use to grow His Church in numbers and His people as disciples.

I encourage church communicators to pour their hearts, minds, and souls into the hard work of communicating the words of eternal life. At the same time, I am aware that our words will only accomplish eternal results because of the blessing of them and working through them of our good, loving, and powerful God. Please check out www.effectivechurchcom.com for more and join me in the great adventure of sharing the words of eternal life.

Reprint Information, Interview, Contact, and Misc. Information

Permission to reproduce quotes from the eBook

You may reproduce quotes of any of the content of this eBook or parts of it for your church staff or you may reprint it for any publication, website, or group that is intended to help churches without additional permission and with my blessings.

PLEASE use the following citation: by Yvon Prehn, www.effectivechurchcom.com and if possible, link to the website, www.effectivechurchcom.com.

For full-length copies of the eBook, you have my permission to make up to five copies to share with church staff or volunteers. For more than that, please buy another copy of the book—one for every five you share.

Interview info

If you would like to interview Yvon Prehn on any of the topics in this publication for either print articles or other media, I would be happy to chat or email answers—contact me through yvonprehn@gmail.com. I have done extensive radio work, some television, and am comfortable with unscripted interviews, call-in, and talk formats.

Additional resources, training, and church communication instruction

The website www.effectivechurchcom.com has hundreds of articles, plus links to training courses, podcasts, and additional resources to help you grow as an effective church communicator. The website has free templates in ready-to-use PDF format, as well as editable MS Publisher.

Citation notes

Some of the material here appeared in earlier versions of articles in Christian Computing Magazine, articles in my newsletters or other publications, my misc. books, and reprints, or on my website, www.effectivechurchcom.com. I remind church communicators of the importance of repetition and I repeat key articles, advice, and key communication teachings in many ways.

Scripture versions and citations:

Unless otherwise noted, Bible verses are from the New International Version. Scripture taken from the HOLY BIBLE, NEW INTERNATIONAL VERSION®. Copyright Scripture quotations marked NLT are taken from the Holy Bible, New Living Translation, copyright 1996. Used by permission of Tyndale House Publishers, Inc., Wheaton, Illinois 60189. All rights reserved.

Passages marked (MSG) are taken from The Message translation. Scripture taken from The Message. Copyright: 1993, 1994, 1995, 1996, 2000, 2001, 2002. Used by permission of NavPress Publishing Group.

Passages marked (KJV) are from the Kings James Version of the Bible. The King James Version is in the public domain in the United States.

PLEASE NOTE: if you are reading this FREE version April 22, 2021 or around then--some of the links below, particularly ones related to the Bibleverse won't be live for a few days--but will be as soon as possible--consider this a preview and do check back!

Social Media, websites, and various links to Yvon Prehn's Bibleverse ministries

I (Yvon Prehn) have two sets of resources, one in Church Communications and another in Bible teaching that are now available through one overall resource—the Bibleverse, where you can find the links to all ministry resources at www.bibleversehub.com.

I decided to create one location that links to my two types of ministry because they are similar in many ways in that they come from my love of God's Word, the Bible, and my desire to do all I can to get people to know it, trust it, and apply in their personal lives and Christian ministries.

A disclaimer/warning to start.

I wish with all my heart I was different in this—but please be aware that I am notoriously erratic in my posting to any and all of the links below. I live under a continuous cloud of guilt because of this and am always trying to figure out ways to be the consistent sort of blogger, podcaster, and social media person that all the advisors on how to be successful in these areas tell you that YOU MUST DO. So far, I have consistently failed.

It is not that I am lazy or taking time off or ignoring what I need to do or do not take seriously ministry commitments. At times I post consistently for months at a time; I work seven days a week most of the time (which I know I should not do and am trying to quit). But then life happens. I have had some relatively serious health issues and financial challenges that required attention to support the ministry, both of which slowed me down. Also, sometimes I get focused on in-depth research or a streak of creation on a topic and shut out everything else while I work on that one thing.

Sometimes, truth be told, I do not like some channels as well as others and do not post them as frequently as I feel I should. I use the term “like” not only in the sense of my emotional reaction to them, but in some sense to what I feel called to concentrate my time on, which I then put more time into. We cannot do everything, and we must make choices and I may or may not make the right choice consistently when I try to answer God's calling in my life.

Not that what I like or not, feel called to or not, has any bearing on the validity of that channel for other ministries, but in case you are wondering here is a listing of the priority of the various channels I create content for in the overall Bibleverse:

I really like doing podcasts and training videos (the research slows me down here).

I also enjoy writing blogs and editing podcast scripts into books—though this takes significant amount of time and I tend to have too many projects open at one time in this area. I do attempt to get this done as quickly as I can and results in some typos in the finished products—I apologize but be aware you may find some.

I do not do Twitter at all and professional my Facebook pages I tolerate (my personal one is private and primarily for relatives and family). I read and participate in a number of church communication Facebook groups, do not do much on my own site. I do want to increase this however as a way to share useful tidbits of helpful information and links.

I quite like Instagram when I write my mini-blogs to go with images—that is on my personal Instagram account below and that is the closest I get to any kind of personal sharing of my thoughts.

Pinterest and the ECC Instagram account are primarily notification channels as far as I am concerned, and they do not get as much attention as they probably should.

Speaking of notification—that is what I use my email lists for primarily. I detest being spammed with constant emails from groups (even ones I like) that seem to assume they deserve more attention and brain space than I think warranted, but I probably should let people know what is going on more than I do. Do sign up for the various emails if you have not thus far and I promise not to overwhelm you.

I want to spend much more time on LinkedIn than I do as many of the wonderful people I have worked with in the past are on it—more focus is coming on that.

I absolutely LOVE creating printable images that combine Bible verses or inspirational sayings with artwork or interesting typefaces. My life direction was greatly influenced by a little plaque given to me by my grandmother that says, “Only one life will soon be past; Only what’s done for Christ will last.”

I started the printables ministry when I realized how important that little saying was to me and that my printables might influence more people to consider a Biblical viewpoint than my blog sermons or podcasts. After I realized I learned I can create printables on my laptop while half paying attention to watching TV (my husband enjoys TV, and I do not want to be a hermit working away in my office all the time). That is how the Bibleverse Shop was born, <https://bibleverse-shop.myshopify.com/>

Though I love creating them, I don’t enjoy the process of putting my printables into the online store which involves creating them in 10 sizes and four formats per image (I could do fewer but I wanted to make them truly printable at many sizes and excellent resolutions) and with that decision the process goes like this—download the design created in Canva as a hi-res PDF—convert to a hi-res jpg—compress the jpg—compress the PDF—zip it all up, then it’s ready to load up to the store, after you create the mockups and marketing images. The condensing and zipping and all the associated work to get them into the necessary formats is exhausting but that is something I simply have to do, and I am working on it, though that in itself takes time from other projects. Completely different processes are required for the Media Made for You and the various eBooks available on the Bibleverse Shop.

Without further ado and without creating unreasonable expectations on when material will be available to you, following are the links for Bible805, Effective Church Communications, and Bibleverse content.

Bibleverse Overall and channels not specific to any one ministry

Bibleverse website, the hub, the link to and updates on all other ministries and resources of YvonPregn’s Bibleverse: <https://bibleversehub.com>

Bibleverse Shop: <https://bibleverse-shop.myshopify.com/>

Instagram personal account (an online devotional, personal devotional thoughts, the most overall Bibleverse content): <https://www.instagram.com/yvonprehn>

LinkedIn: <https://www.linkedin.com/in/yvonprehn/>

Bible805

Bible805 website, Bible teaching, and link to Bible podcast: <https://www.bible805.com>

Bible805 Podcast, from here you can find links to listen to the Bible 805 podcast on iTunes and many other podcast resources: <https://anchor.fm/yvon-prehn8>

Bible805 YouTube videos: <https://www.youtube.com/channel/UCnQJIt33JE2PxYAAMXcpMeg>
When I get more subscribers, I will have a direct Bible805 link—please subscribe if you haven't as yet.

Effective Church Communications

Effective Church Communications website: <http://www.effectivechurchcom.com>

YouTube videos on Church Communications: <http://www.youtube.com/yvonprehn>

Pinterest: <https://www.pinterest.com/effectivechurchcom/>

Instagram ministry account: <https://www.instagram.com/effectivechurchcom>

Facebook: <http://www.facebook.com/EffectiveChurchCommunications>

Podcast about Effective Church Communications: <https://anchor.fm/yvon-prehn>